

Abram Działowski

Since the establishment of the Craftsmen's Union in Częstochowa, Abram Działowski was its vice-chairman. He devoted all his time to communal work in the union.

He was a master shoe-stitcher and, due to his office, had little time to work. As a result, he lived in great poverty. From their earliest years, his children were forced to learn trades in order to, later, be able to work for the daily bread.

The dedicated craftsmen's activist Abram Działowski was, several times, elected as the representative on the Jewish Kehilla.

He devoted his entire life to communal work, right up to the last hours of his life. On Yom Kippur Eve, he was at the union, where he carried out a whole series of matters for its members. On his way home, late at night, he suffered a heart attack and, within a few minutes, his life, which had been in the service of society, ended.
