

The Book Committee

Fiszele Chiap sold textbooks to the pupils of the primary schools and high schools. He had, above all, many used books, which he sold much cheaper. Therefore, student youth of all strata bought exclusively from him.

He did not have an actual shop - his "place of business" was his dwelling, a little, old house in front of "Kapeluszarnia" [the hat factory]. One had to go up several steps to reach him.

In his last years, when he was already very old, he still knew how to find everything, knew the exact content of every little book and dealt with his young clients warmly.

(He, too, perished at the hands of the German murderers.)

¹ [TN: Spelled טשיאפ in the Yiddish original; most certainly a nickname. The meaning is as yet unknown.]
